ABOUT THE INTERDISCIPLINARY MINOR IN WOMEN'S, GENDER, AND SEXUALITY STUDIES

As a student in the interdisciplinary minor in Women's, Gender, and Sexuality Studies at St. John's University, you examine how social structures of power based on gender, sexuality, race, ethnicity, social class, and other intersecting forces influence our lives and communities. While women's, gender, and sexuality studies continue to explore women's experiences and underrepresentation in knowledge production, the field also examines the ways gender relations, including masculinities and sexuality, combine with other categories of difference and become embedded in social, political, and cultural formations.

This 15-credit minor is an excellent complement to all majors. The professors who teach in the minor represent the departments of art, English, government and politics, history, languages and literatures, and sociology. With their guidance, you delve into a rich body of knowledge to explore social, historical, artistic, literary, scientific, and social issues through the lens of gender.

You can select the minor in Women's, Gender, and Sexuality Studies at any time prior to graduation, as long as you satisfactorily complete the required courses. With approval of the program director, you may be able to apply internship credits to the minor and explore particular gender and sexuality issues through real-world work experience.

WHAT CAN I DO WITH A MINOR IN WOMEN'S, GENDER, AND SEXUALITY STUDIES?

With the strong analytical, communication, and research skills you develop in the minor, along with your understanding of cultural, social, and political forces that shape concepts of gender and sexuality, you'll be a competitive applicant for jobs in government, public policy, research, and service organizations. The minor is a strong foundation for graduate programs in anthropology, art history, English, history, philosophy, psychology, sociology, and theology, as well as professional training in law, management, medicine, and social work.

As part of the Women's, Gender, and Sexuality Studies program, you engage with scholars and activists in the field through on-campus lectures and events. You have the opportunity to showcase your research and build professional relationships relating to your interests, all of which contribute to career success.
